

Margaret Barber

Department of Education and Human Services

Barber, assistant professor in the department of education, joins Lehigh from the University of San Diego, where she has been program coordinator of the Educational Leadership Development Academy and a teaching fellow since 2001. Barber received her doctorate in educational leadership and master's degree in educational administration from Columbia University and her bachelor's degrees in English literature and American cultural studies from Bates College. Her research interests include principal transformation leadership on three domains of teacher outcomes: motivation, empowerment, and morality. She is also a board member of the West Coast Center for the A.K. Rice Institute for the Study of Social Systems.