

GLOBAL CITIZENSHIP AT LEHIGH

HOUSING FAIR!

Where are you going to live next year? Interested in living with students who are committed to becoming global citizens? Learn more about the Global Citizenship House by visiting our website at http://www.lehigh.edu/~ingc/gc_house/. Also, check out the Housing Fair this Thursday, January 17th. It will be from 5:00-7:00 pm in the lobby of Cort Dining Hall in the Lower UC. Representatives from each of the communities will be present to share general information about their respective house. The Open Houses will be from 7:00-9:00 pm at Brodhead House (Sub Free), Warren Square A (Green), and

Warren Square D (Global Citizenship). Feel free to stop by any or all of these houses at any time during the two hour block. This is a great opportunity for you to see these communities in person. Please email Dan

Mathew Sanderson – University of Utah
Globalization and International Migration: A Cross-National Analysis

Jan. 15 – 12:00-1:30 – CU 230

International migration from less-developed countries is widely acknowledged to be an important outcome of globalization. Yet our collective understanding of how globalization impacts international migration remains limited. Sanderson will present a cross-national empirical analysis that addresses the questions of whether and how globalization is associated with international migration flows from less-developed countries. He will describe the theoretical framework that links globalization and international migration and review the methodology and data employed for the study. He will conclude by discussing the implications of the study for theory and policy.

Amandeep Sandhu – University of California, Santa Barbara
“Globalization of Services and the Making of a New Global Service Labor Force in India’s Silicon Valley”

Jan. 17 – 3:00-4:30 – Maginnes 102

Sandhu will present research findings on cultural change among Indian call center workers performing global service work in Bangalore. He argues that globalization of services is a second generation globalization, distinct from the first generation globalization of manufacturing, and produces distinct cultural change. Workers under the globalization of services are connected to the global economy at the very level of their consciousness and subjectivity. Their live interactions with customers globally lead these workers to assimilate global modes of being. The tension between these global modes of identity and their local class position identity causes a contradictory class location and consciousness, and produces psychic suffering.

Ben Brewer – James Madison University
“Switching Fields: Soccer, Globalization, and the North-South Divide”

Jan. 22 – 12:00-1:30 – CU 230

Brewer’s lecture discusses his research into the political-economy of world soccer. At a time when the leading economies of the Global North have come to specialize increasingly in the “intangible” activities of branding, marketing, lifestyle creation, and the service sector more broadly, the world soccer economy provides a useful - but essentially overlooked - window into the dynamics of globalization and social change. He will focus on the changing structure and control of the world soccer economy from its emergence in the early 1970s to the present. In particular, Brewer discusses how the world soccer economy has both challenged and reinforced many long-standing patterns of global inequalities.

David Ortiz – University of Notre Dame
“Confronting Oppression with Violence: A Dynamic, Continuous-Time Analysis of the Relationship between Collective Action and State Repression.”

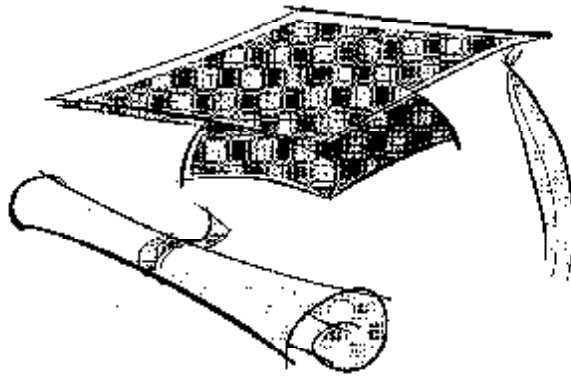

Jan. 30 – 4:00-5:30 – Maginnes 101

Ortiz addresses the dynamics of the relationship between state repression and collective popular actions through time using event history analysis techniques. He will explain his cross-national analysis, which covers more than 30 countries (mainly in Europe and the Americas) and produces a time-dependent model that is essential to fully explain the complexities of the collective action-repression dyad as a highly dynamic process. He focuses on how differences in the magnitude and form of repression affect the incidence of collective action.
